We need an easier way to hook our computers up to the Internet than wires and routers so we need an easier way to add e-mail accounts and access the Internet to our computers. This is where Open Mail Providers comes in. OpenMPG is an open source email server written in Perl. We can add as many e-mail providers as we want, and access these accounts from our computers through a browser. Let's set it up. ./configure --prefix=/usr/local make make install OpenMPG needs to be started by us first. We're not really using it yet. We'll start it with the -daemon option, this will run the command in the background in the "shell" that started us. If you're using the default settings it should all work out of the box. Right now you only have one e-mail address. And that's me@fawnessblog.com. Let's get some more. You need to add an account file, something like this: pick a password, it can
